Landichos receive Distinction in ICAS

Once again the Landichos made it to the top!

Juan Rafael Landicho, a Sixth Grade Valiant Knight, and Maria Bernadette Landicho, a Fifth Grade Valiant Knight, both bagged a Distinction Award in the 2017 International Competitions and Assessments for School (ICAS) – Mathematics conducted last August 2017.

The Educational Assessment Australia revealed that there are 384 participants in the Philippines who were awarded with distinction certificates and two among those outstanding students are the Landichos.

Landicho, Juan Rafael M.

Landicho, Ma. Bernadette M.

This recent feat of Rafael and Bernadette is just one of the many other recognitions and awards that they bagged in different local and international competitions this year.

The school would like to thank all the parents and guardians of the valiant knights who supported them during the school's Intramurals last November 21-24.

Thank you for your generosity in sponsoring drinks to our valiant players. Indeed, all your support motivated the students to do their best and achieve in all of the games they played. Moreover, your presence during the Intramurals week greatly inspired the players to be committed in achieving more.

You also helped us in instilling the values of integrity, commitment, and sportsmanship to our dear students. We are more than thankful with your overwhelming support in all of the activities of the school. We definitely look forward to more and stronger partnerships with you.

Tips to Help Your Child Prepare for Tests

By Laura Lewis Brown

With children being handed homework as early as preschool, it's important to start thinking about study habits at a young age. Don't wait for a bad test grade to take action. The Long Test is just around the corner. The students will take their Long Tests on December 5-7. With that, here are some tips to support your child in taking tests at any age:

- 1. Encourage Consistency. Homework and studying should be a regular activity, so that preparing for a test is never a last-minute cram session. Test taking is a skill, which means it requires practice.
- 2. Establish Healthy Study Habits. Children also need a quiet, organized space for studying. That can be a desk or even a spot at the dining-room table, which you can help set up by sharpening pencils and putting them in a cup or providing other supplies. Organization is essential, and it's a skill that they will take with them as they grow.
- 3. Communicate with the Teacher. If you are stuck on how to help your child study for a particular subject, don't hesitate to contact the teacher. Ask the teachers who work with your child what is the best way to help. They spend a great deal of time with each student and will have ideas.
- 4. Personalize Study Tactics. As you determine how the teacher assesses her students, keep in mind that your child has different strengths, even within test taking. "Some kids have a hard time with essay questions. Some have a hard time with multiple choice," Simpkins says. Talk to the teacher to help recognize your child's pitfalls, and review past tests to determine areas that need support.
- 5. Focus on Confidence. Never underestimate the power of confidence, which is the ultimate goal above a good test score. You want your child to walk into school confident every day, Sinovoi says. Be the supportive voice, offering encouragement as they work on their homework and tests. Make yourself available to field questions. You can also instill confidence by giving them space and time to do their work, showing them that their study time is important and they have a say in it.

A big reason students experience test anxiety is fear of the unknown. But if you emphasize how well your child knows the concepts to be covered on the test, he or she will feel more ready.
